"One's destination is never a place but rather a new way of looking at things." ~Henry Miller

For this series, two photographs were taken at each location - one, of a selected subject, and another of the sky above it.

Sky is the element that connects all of the images. The color blue connects each subject with its corresponding sky. The juxtaposition of context and perspective is intended to evoke a shift in perception where the viewer is invited to become the central element that connects the two images in each pair and offers access to both; to be present, to be open to a dynamic that mirrors the intention of the Bluecoup Project.

Show us photos of your blue view.
Find a favorite blue person, place or thing and take a photo. Then get a shot of the sky overhead. We want to see what you see.
